In view of evil and pain, are you more prone to ignore it (and pretend everything is fine), or dwell on it (and ignore that there's hope!)? Why do you think that is?

How about the author of Ecclesiastes? Do you feel he ignores evil/pain or that he dwells on it without hope?

Have you noticed the three statements at the bottom of the page? How does this passage confirm that life is short?

Do you see the author affirm life is eternal or life is good? Where?

Why are all three statements necessary to keep from having a distorted perspective? Which does this world make hardest for you to keep in mind?

How were you challenged, convicted, or comforted by this passage?
